

Statement of participation

Vladyslav Butenko

has completed the free course including any mandatory tests for:

The First World War: trauma and memory

This free 9-hour course explored the themes of trauma and memory in the First World War.

Issue date: 2 August 2022

www.open.edu/openlearn

This statement does not imply the award of credit points nor the conferment of a University Qualification.
This statement confirms that this free course and all mandatory tests were passed by the learner.

Please go to the course on OpenLearn for full details:

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/history-the-arts/the-first-world-war-trauma-and-memory/content-section-overview>

COURSE CODE: OUFL_14

The First World War: trauma and memory

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/history-the-arts/the-first-world-war-trauma-and-memory/content-section-overview>

Course summary

In this free course, The First World War: trauma and memory, you will study the subject of physical and mental trauma, its treatments and its representation. You will focus not only on the trauma experienced by combatants but also the effects of the First World War on civilian populations.

Learning outcomes

By completing this course, the learner should be able to:

- find and critically evaluate casualty rates, as well as interrogate different data sets
- understand what is meant by 'shell shock' and the extent to which it was culturally and historically specific
- reflect on the traumatic experiences of civilians in wartime, focusing in particular on atrocities and on the experience of wartime hunger and disease
- reflect on representations of trauma and grief in literature and art.

Completed study

The learner has completed the following:

Week 1

Physical and mental casualties

Week 2

Civilian war experiences

Week 3

Trauma, grief and bereavement